A LIST OF AUTO-BIOGRAPHIES, BIOGRAPHIES, RECOLLECTIONS, REMINISCENCES, etc.

(Arranged in alphabetical order of subject)

Compiled by JOHN PARKER

THESE book-lists are not to be regarded as bibliographies. They are merely hand-lists which I hope may prove of some use to those who may be interested in theatrical biography. Where no name is indicated in the author's column, the work is autobiographical.

HEREDITARY THEATRICAL FAMILIES

(All rights reserved)

BY THE LATE J. M. BULLOCH

(One fresh table has been added, and all have been amended and brought up to date. J.P.)

THESE tables, which now deal with a hundred families, are a contribution to the history of heredity on the stage, and while they are necessarily incomplete owing to the great lack of data, they cover more ground than has been attempted hitherto. They are purposely confined to members of a family who have been on the stage, or who have practised any of the other arts.

Heredity and environment have a great deal to do with the choice of all the professions, but they are particularly active in acting, especially of acting in the old days of stock companies or of short runs, when the player practically spent his life in the theatre. They are still more powerful with people in the circus business, which is a primitive form of acting, for, whereas players may enter upon a theatrical career when they are grown up, equestrians, acrobats and the like, who may afterwards graduate into clowns, have, by the very necessity of the case, to begin when they are very young, and are practically cradled in the sawdust. The consequence is that circus folk not only keep to their business, but marry within it. Indeed, the circus business of the world is confined, owing to these marriages, to a small group of families of whom the Cookes, dealt with in these tables, are typical.

As I have shown, they are intermarried into a number of other famous circus families, and the tables concerning their intermarriages and the facts about these intermarriages would fill several tables. Almost the only book on these circus families is the Artisten Lexikon, by H. W. Otto, " Signor Saltarino," published in Düsseldorf in 1891. The book is not only exceedingly rare, but is out of date.

On the other hand, I have enlarged the tables which show players belonging to families who have distinguished themselves in other forms of art. Of these one of the most distinguished is the Comptons, especially through intermarriage with the Addington Symonds family, which has displayed extraordinary ability in many of the arts. Something of the same sort occurs in the case of William Terriss's family, the Lewins, who were connected with India and the Law, and India also was responsible for the Prinsep group, as descended from one of the beautiful Pattle sisters. Once they reach the stage these families seem to become further involved with the theatre, shown in the case of Mr. Anthony Prinsep's marriages and also in the case of William Terriss's children.

The business of acting is indeed so highly infectious that actors' children take to it in spite of any discouragement that may be offered; and sometimes when the parents' advice has been taken in the first generation, as in the case of Macready's son, now General Sir Nevil Macready, who is a good amateur actor, it breaks out in the next generation, as in the case of the General's daughter. As Judge Parry has reminded us, Charles Calvert " forbade " his son Louis " to think of the stage," but, of course, after a spell of the sea, the boy did so—with the result we know. " I am sorry to say," writes a veteran comedian, " all my children who grew up were on the stage; some of them still are, occasionally, when they can get anything to do."

And yet, to have been brought up in the atmosphere and environment of the stage does not necessarily imply exceptional skill or aptitude in acting although it may start a family of actors of varying degrees of merit. On the other hand, men without any theatrical strain in their families have become famous actors. Thus Sir Herbert Tree's father was a man of business, Sir George

Alexander's a commercial traveller, Mr. Waller's a civil engineer, Sir Charles Wyndham's an hotel keeper—and, by the way, none of these used his own patronymic on the stage. The father of Mr. Bourchier was an army officer; Mr. Arthur Collins's an architect, and many similar instances could be cited.

The oldest theatrical family still represented on the stage seems to be that of the Pitts, founded by Mrs. Ann Pitt (1720–99), dealt with here in the table of the Addison, Dibdin, and Pitt families.

The next oldest family is the Kembles, whose founder, Roger Kemble (1721–1802), produced a remarkable family, including Mrs. Siddons. The histrionic instinct must have been strengthened in them through their mother, who was an Irishwoman. Indeed, the ranks of our actors, as has frequently been pointed out, are very largely made up of people of Celtic or Jewish origin. To take a modern example, Sir Henry Irving himself, born at Keinton in Somerset, had a Cornish mother and his wife was Irish; the famous American family of Booth was Jewish; and the Comptons bear the fine Highland name of Mackenzie. The Kembles began acting probably about the year of the second Jacobite Rising and were represented on the stage till November, 1907, in the male line, by the late Mr. Henry Kemble, and in the female line by the late Mr. Frank Kemble Cooper, whose children are the youngest generation on the stage with a Kemble strain. Curiously enough, the only actor family dealt with by Sir Francis Galton, in his Hereditary Genius, was that of the Kembles: while the Germans, with all their laboriousness, have dealt with only two families, the Bassermanns and the Devrients (1932), in two books by the Berlin critic, Herr Julius Bab. The latter volume contains eleven tables of the Devrient family covering nine generations, from a Tabakhandler in Mannheim in the seventeenth century.

The tables, laboriously compiled and frequently revised, as obscure data have turned up, are indebted in some cases to other genealogists. Thus, the one dealing with the Blands (ancestors of the late Duke of Fife) and Glovers are chiefly compiled from Mr. J. F. Fuller's elaborate "Pedigree of the Family of Bland, late of Derriquin Castle, Co. Kerry" (1907). The Jay table is founded on the articles by Mr. Ralph Thomas in Notes and Queries (10th s. vi, 441, 502). I am wholly indebted to the late Mr. Walter Copeland Jerrold for the table of the Jerrolds, for he had constituted himself the family historian. I am also much indebted to the late Mr. T. McDonald Rendle, whose memories of theatrical personalia during the last fifty odd years was amazingly comprehensive. The tables of American acting families are based largely on a series of articles in the Theatre, of New York. I have also to express my best thanks to Mr. John Parker, the Editor of this book, whose knowledge of players past and present is probably unique; he has supplied many details and suggested several of the tables. Mr. W. J. Lawrence, who possesses a minute knowledge of the nooks and crannies of old theatrical history has helped me generously. The veteran Dame Sarah Mair, D.B.E., has helped me with the Murray-Siddons family. I regret that such a book as the present does not readily afford facilities for citing chapter and verse for the statements in the tables.

Theatrical biography is exceedingly difficult to trace because of the players' fundamental disinclination to deal in anything so concrete as facts and dates, while birth certificates, especially in the case of older actors, are almost impossible to get. In some cases the player shows a natural dislike of any inquiry into his origins, because there are strains of illegitimacy. Let me say here, that, while I have not, in the case of living players or their descendants, indicated by the conventional dotted line these illegitimate descents, I am perfectly well aware of them. But I have given these descents because "marriage lines" have nothing whatever to do with the inheritance of ability. Besides, as players so frequently change their names, the inclusion of such people is not so misleading as in the case of the genealogies of non-theatrical families.

I may note in conclusion that players themselves have, during the years in which these tables have been published, given very little assistance or added anything to the facts stated, although additional information is, and always has been, very welcome, for it is only by continued and co-operative care that anything approaching completeness can be attained.

March, 1936 J. M. B.

Since the death of Dr. Bulloch, I have discovered that the male line of the Kemble family, which he believed to be extinct, is still represented on the stage in the person of MR. CHARLES SIDDONS KEMBLE, and the table has been amended accordingly.

A further interesting discovery which I have made in connection with the Kembles, is that Miss PAMELA STANLEY, the actress who played Queen Victoria in "Victoria Regina," is the great-great-great-niece of the immortal Mrs. Siddons. She is the second daughter of the late Arthur Lyulph Stanley, 5th Baron Stanley of Alderley (d. 1931), by his wife Margaret Evelyn, who was the younger daughter of Henry Evans Gordon and his wife Mary (Sartoris). Mary Sartoris was the daughter of the well-known singer and writer, ADELAIDE KEMBLE (Mrs. Sartoris 1814–79) who was, in turn, the niece of SARAH (KEMBLE) SIDDONS (1755–1831). Miss Pamela Stanley's brother, the present Baron Stanley of Alderley, is Mrs. Siddons' great-great-great-nephew. Roger Furse, the designer, and his sister Judith Furse, actress, children of Joan Sartoris, who married General Sir William Thomas Furse, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., D.S.O., stand in the same relationship to Mrs. Siddons.

I have greatly amplified the LUPINO and WEBSTER tables which now show that these families have been continuously engaged in the amusement world since the days of Charles II. The Irving, Conquest, and Drew tables have also been greatly extended; there is a new table of the Collins, Davis and Frankau families, and all the other tables have been brought up to date as far as I can trace.

THE ADDISON, DIBDIN, and PITT FAMILIES

This family seems distinct from that of James Pitt, harlequin at Drury Lane and the "Turveydrop" of Manchester, whose daughter married Will Pigot, comedian, and became the mother of Tom Pigot, which Tom took the name of Percy Milton and helped to form the Milton Rays Company. James Pitt was the great-grandfather of James and May Agate.

THE BOUCICAULTS

The Vanbrughs' mother, Frances Mary Emily Nation, was the half sister of the late W. H. C. Nation, of Rockbeare, Devon (1843–1914), who made a hobby of running theatres with his own plays, and yet left £311,672. THE COMPTONS (TABLE A)

The Symonds family and its branches show remarkable ability, notably in the Hills, represented to-day by Sir Leonard Hill, who is not only a physiologist but an artist, and the latter's son, Brian, who is a poet. John Addington Symonds' cousin, Rev. Samuel John Stone (1839–1900), wrote "The Church's One Foundation," and another, Miss Emily Morse Symonds ("George Paston") was a writer and dramatist. St. Loe Strachey (1860–1927) was a cousin once removed. The latter's daughter Amabel, wife of Mr. Clough Williams-Ellis, architect, is a writer, as also is her brother.

An elaborate pedigree of all the Kembles, compiled by Miss M. G. Wright under the direction of F. C. Morgan of the Hereford Public Library was described by W. T. J. Gun in the Genealogical Magazine (March, 1933: vii, 12–15). Roger Furse, designer, and Judith Furse, actress, children of Jean Gordon, who married General Sir William T. Furse, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., D.S.O., are cousins of Adelaide and Pamela Stanley. Jill Furse, cousin of Roger and Judith, married Laurence Whistler, poet, brother of the late Rex Whistler, the artist. Six years after her death, Whistler married Theresa Furse, daughter of Sir Ralph Furse.

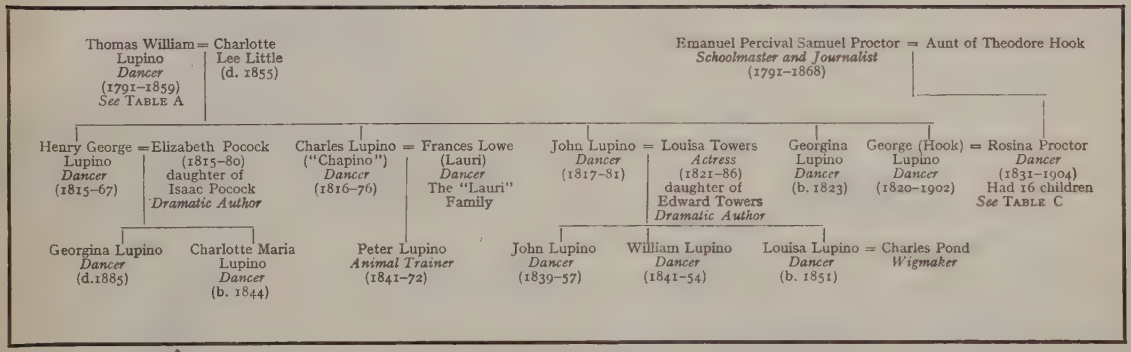
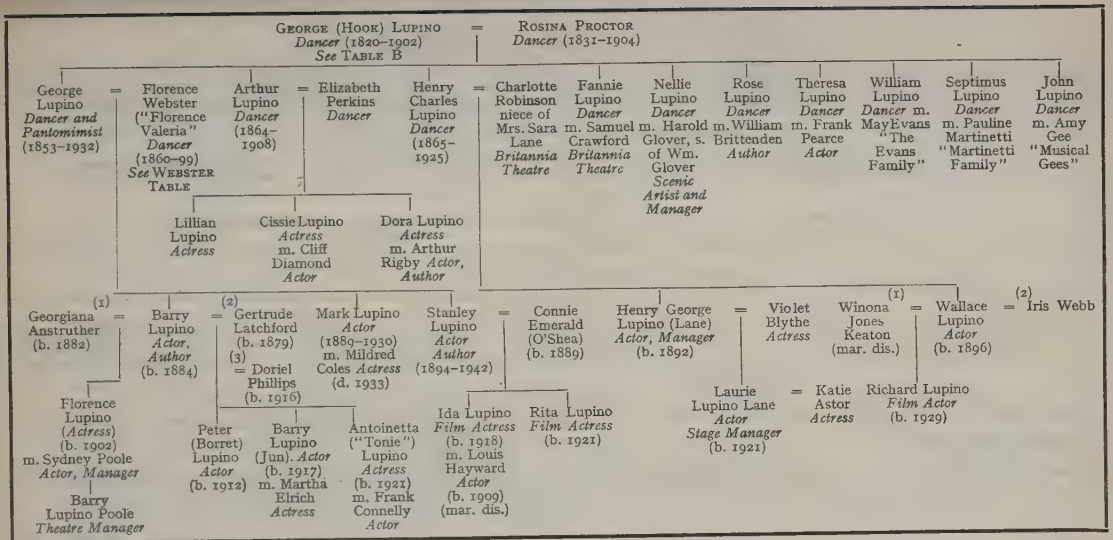
THE LUPINOS (Table A)

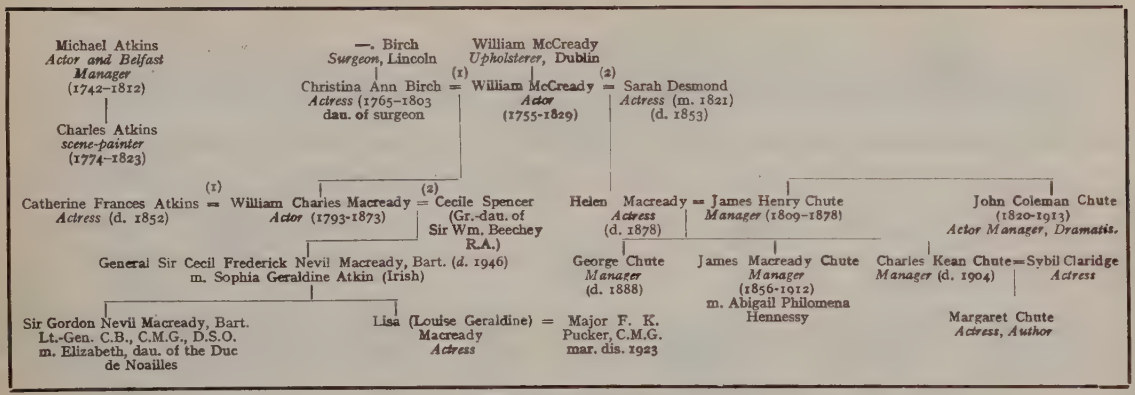


THE LUPINOS (Table B)

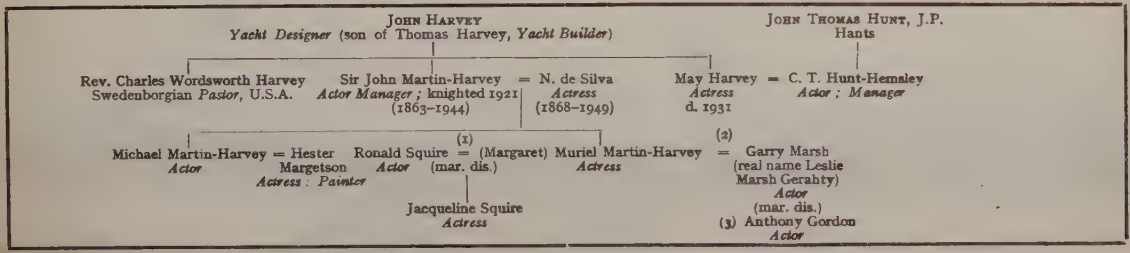


THE LUPINOS (Table C)

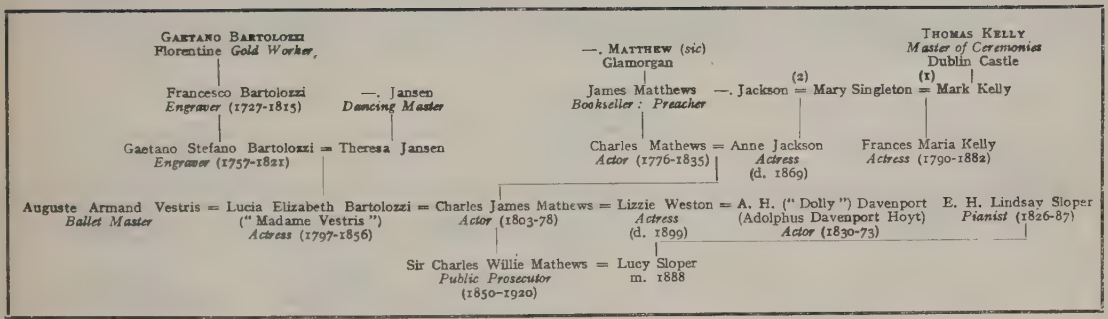
When George Lupino married Florence Webster on 11th November, 1878, they had the distinction of uniting the two oldest families continually engaged in the business of entertainment. Both families date back to the seventeenth century. In addition to the Websters, the Lupinos have intermarried with many other well-known stage families, including the Estcourts, Violantes, Bolognas, Lauris, Robinsons and Crawfords (Lanes), Glovers, Evans, Martinettis and Gees. A considerable portion of these tables is based on details kindly supplied by Mr. Barry Lupino, the head of the existing branches of the family and its "official archivist." He is, in addition, an ardent collector of theatrical literature.



THE MACREADY FAMILY



THE MARTIN-HARVEYS



THE MATHEWS FAMILY

Charles Mathews, the elder, was the uncle of James Matthews Leigh (1808–60), artist and dramatist, who was the father of Henry Sambrooke Leigh (1837–83), author of Carols of Cockayne. It is stated in Who's Who (1920) that Sir Charles was "the son of William and Elizabeth West and step-son of Charles James Mathews, the comedian, whose name he assumed by deed poll." But "Burke" called him the son of Charles James Mathews and he strongly resembled the latter in features.

THE ROBERTSONS—Table A. (See Table B; also Brunton and Kendal Tables)

Although the usual books of reference are wrong in believing that the Robertsons are descended from James Robertson the comedian of York (1713–1795) there seems little doubt they are descended from James Shaftoe Robertson, who was a comedian in York at the same time, but who afterwards became connected with the theatres in the Lincoln circuit. An elaborate inquiry distinguishing James Robertson and James Shaftoe Robertson was contributed by J. M. Bulloch to Notes and Queries (Dec. 3, 10, 17, 1932; clxiii, 398, 418, 434). Henry Arkell seems connected with Reginald Arkell, dramatist, who married Elizabeth Evans (Actress), daughter of Edwin Evans, biographer of Brahms, and sister of Edwin Evans, Musical Critic. The 1st Lord Russell's nephew, Walter Russell, R.A., is Keeper of the Royal Academy.

THE WALLACKS (OF ENGLISH ORIGIN)

HONOURS IN THE THEATRE

By JOHN PARKER

THE Knighthood conferred upon Henry Irving by Queen Victoria in 1895 was the first honour to be received from the Crown by any actor. Irving's position as the head of his profession, and his remarkable record of management of the Lyceum Theatre from 1878, had given him a unique position. His Knighthood was universally acclaimed and he was immensely proud that, through him, the members of his profession had at last received Royal recognition; especially as for nearly five centuries, until the relieving Act of 1824 (Act 5, George IV, C.83) they had been classed under Statute Law as "Rogues and Vagabonds."

During Irving's lifetime, the only other actors similarly honoured were Squire Bancroft and Charles Wyndham. Bancroft received his Knighthood in Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee honours of 1897. Wyndham was Knighted in King Edward VII's Coronation honours, in 1902. Five years elapsed before John Hare was similarly honoured. Since that date, many connected with the Theatre and Drama have had honours bestowed upon them. Actors, actresses, managers, and dramatists have all been singled out for distinction, although in the case of the dramatists, J. M. Barrie, John Galsworthy, and Professor Gilbert Murray, on whom the Order of Merit was bestowed, they were honoured primarily for their services to Literature, and secondly to the Drama. Knighthoods were bestowed for similar dual services on Arthur Conan Doyle, F. C. Burnand, and Hall Caine.

In earlier times many honours had been bestowed on celebrated men intimately connected with the Theatre, but these distinctions were always for services in other walks of life. The earliest was probably Sir William D'Avenant, who was knighted for services rendered at the Siege of Gloucester in 1643. Other early familiar names in the annals of the Theatre and Drama were Sir William Killigrew, Sir Charles Sedley, Sir Lumley Skeffington, the Earl of Orrery (Roger Boyle), Sir Aston Cockayne, Sir David Erskine, the Earl of Lansdowne (George Granville), Sir Robert Howard, Sir John Vanbrugh, Sir Richard Steele, and at a much later date, Edward Bulwer, first Lord Lytton, Lord Newry (later Earl of Kilmorey), Sir Thomas N. Talfourd, the first Lord Tennyson, Sir Theodore Martin, etc.

There have been several instances of titled persons adopting the stage as a profession, including Sir George Power, Bt., Sir Randal Roberts, the 4th Earl Cowley (Arthur Wellesley), the Earl of Rosslyn (as James Erskine), Lord Lyveden (formerly Percy Vernon), Sir William Don, Bt., Sir Basil Bartlett, Bt., etc. Others well known in the world of the Theatre in our time are the 3rd Earl of Latham, the Earl of Longford, and Lord Dunsany, who succeeded to their titles.

The first woman to be honoured for services to the stage was the American-born Genevieve Ward, who was created a Dame of the Order of the British Empire in 1921, and she was followed by Ellen Terry, who received the honour in 1925.

* Married before Succession

FROM first to last, that is, from 1735, if not 1722, to 1945, forty-seven actresses have married peers, representing nine Dukes, including a royal one, three Marquises, seventeen Earls, four Viscounts, and sixteen Barons. Fourteen of the peers married before succession and thirty-three after succession. Two of the peers twice married actresses.

The fashion was set by the 3rd Earl of Peterborough, the famous general Charles Mordaunt, who married as his second wife Anastasia Robinson, the singer. The exact year is doubtful, for there is no record of the ceremony. That is impossible nowadays, with keen-eyed journalists on the outlook for news although even now such marriages are sometimes quietly contracted before they are noticed. Peterborough's marriage probably took place in 1722, but more probably in 1735—for he had long kept company with the lady. Peterborough's marriage with Anastasia formed, it may be remembered, the basis of George Meredith's sparkling novel "Lord Ormont and his Aminta," issued in 1894.

The second marriage was that of Charles (Powlett), 3rd Duke of Bolton, who married at Aix in Provence in 1752, as his second wife, Lavinia Fenton, who had been his mistress since 1728, bearing him three natural sons. The lady, whose birth name was Beswick—Fenton was the name of her stepfather, a coffee-house keeper at Charing Cross—created the part of Polly Peachum in "The Beggar's Opera" in 1728, and Hogarth's portrait of her as such hangs in the National Gallery. This marriage is very interesting because two Earls Poulett, representing the senior line of the Duke's family (now Paulet, Marquises of Winchester), in our own time married actresses.

Of the forty seven actresses married to peers, only eight have had sons who succeeded. Six had issue that did not succeed. Five had issue that may succeed. More than half have had no issue.

Four of the peers, Lord Cowley, Lord Lyveden, Lord Rosslyn, and Viscount Dangan were at one time actors. Two peers, Viscount Torrington and the Duke of Leinster, have twice married actresses.

On four occasions father and son have married actresses, viz: the 7th and 8th Earls Poulett, the Earl of Drogheda and his heir, Viscount Moore, the 3rd and 4th Barons Churston, the 4th Earl of Cowley and his heir, Viscount Dangan.

In two cases, actresses have married twice into the peerage. Olive May was first married in 1913 to Lord Victor Paget, brother of the 6th Marquis of Anglesey. Her only son (born 1914) by this marriage (dis. 1922) is in the succession. She married secondly, in 1922, the Earl of Drogheda.

Denise Orme was first married in 1907, to the third Baron Churston, a marriage which was dissolved in 1928. In 1946, she married the seventh Duke of Leinster, whose former wife, May Etheridge, was also an actress.

One of the daughters of the Duchess of Leinster by her former husband, Baron Churston, the Hon. Primrose Lillian Yarde-Buller, married in 1936, the 4th Earl Cadogan, and her sister, the Hon. Denise Margaret Yarde-Buller, married in 1941 the fifth Baron Ebury.

In eleven cases the marriage has been dissolved, six at the instance of the husband and five at the instance of the actress-wife.

In one case, not included in the list, the son of an actress-wife has succeeded to the peerage of his grandfather. Eileen Orme (Ethel Rose Kendall), cousin of Denise Orme (formerly Lady Churston and now Duchess of Leinster), married the Hon. Maurice Hood (1881–1915), heir of the 2nd Viscount Bridport. He was killed in action, leaving a son Rowland (born 1911), who succeeded to the viscountcy in 1924, and whose mother received (1925) the title and precedence of the widow of a Viscount.

Several actresses have married younger sons of peers, the best known being—

	Married
Adele Astaire	1932	Lord Charles Cavendish, younger son of the Duke of Devonshire (died 1944) no issue.
Camille Clifford	1906	Hon. Henry Lyndhurst Bruce, heir 2nd Lord Aberdare (died 1914). No issue
Isé Collins	1920	Lord Robert Innes Ker, 3rd son of 7th Duke of Roxburghe (mar. dis. 1935). No issue
Sylvia Hawkes	1927	Lord Ashley, heir 9th Earl of Shaftesbury (mar. dis. 1934). No issue. Subsequently married to the late Douglas Fairbanks, actor, and in 1944 she married the 6th Baron Stanley of Alderley. In 1948, she was again divorced, and then in 1949 married Clark Gable, the film-actor.
Ellis Jeffreys	1894	Hon. Frederick Curzon, son of the 3rd Earl Howe (mar. dis. 1903). They had a son, Chambré George William Penn Curzon, formerly Officer R.N., now an actor, George Curzon
Peggy Rush	1913	Viscount Dunsford, heir 1st Earl Midleton (mar. dis. 1925). No issue
Kate Walsh (died 1903)	1871	Earl of Euston, heir of 7th Duke of Grafton. No issue.

Another theatrical alliance, not, however, recognized by the law, was that of H.R.H. the Duke of Clarence, afterwards King William IV, with Mrs. Jordan (1762–1816). The eldest of their four sons was created Earl of Munster in 1831; his brothers and three of his five sisters were granted the title and precedence of the younger issue of a marquis; two of the other sisters had already married into the peerage. The third daughter, Elizabeth FitzClarence, married the 18th Earl of Erroll, and her great-grandson, the 21st Earl (1886–1928), wrote several plays while he was Lord Kilmarnock and in diplomacy. The late Duke of Fife was also descended from Mrs. Jordan through his Erroll mother. His Grace's daughter, Princess Arthur of Connaught, is a keen playgoer, and his nephew, Mr. Hart-Davies, was an actor before he became a publisher, and married an actress, all of which is shown in the Bland table.

It need hardly be added that the son of Nell Gwynne was created Duke of St. Albans.

The editor of the new edition of The Complete Peerage promises a list of peers who have married actresses, singers, and dancers, as an appendix in the last volume of that encyclopaedic work.

EDUCATION AND THE THEATRE

NOTHING could give a better impression of the immense departure from the " rogu and vagabond " theory of actors, than the fact that the profession to-day is bein strongly recruited in this country, both men and women, from the publi schools and universities. From the earliest times, of course, dramatists hav been drawn from the educated classes—Shakespeare notwithstanding; but th rank and file of their interpreters, especially of the strolling variety, had littl Latin and less Greek. That, however, has changed, all the more since the Uni versity of Oxford first permitted, in 1880, the creation of the O.U.D.S., whil boys from public schools of many grades have, in recent times, sought th theatre as a profession, either as actor, manager, producer, designer, or dramatist

Within the past few years the University of London has also given importan recognition to the Theatre, by granting a Diploma in Dramatic Art; throug the media of the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, the Central School of Speec Training and Dramatic Art, and in a limited degree, the Regent Street Poly technic.

The movement generally has been greatly helped by amateur acting associa tions, and by the regularizing of study through schools of acting, as against th old, somewhat empiric, if thorough-going, fashion of graduation on the stag itself from the very bottom of the ladder.

It is rather curious that the American university man appears to have bee far more shy of donning sock and buskin than his British cousin, and the majorit seem to have entered the ranks of authors, composers, and designers rather tha those of the actor.

The following is an attempt to indicate the source of this new reservoir o ability on which the theatre draws, as revealed in the present edition of WHO WHO IN THE THEATRE.
